Lud In The Mist Hope

30-odd years before Tolkein published "The Lord of the Rings", a British woman named Hope Mirrlees wrote a fantasy called "Lud-in-the-Mist". Neil Gaiman wrote an introduction to the edition I read and I can see that he meant every word. His own "Stardust" draws very heavily on "Lud-in-the-Mist", especially in setting and tone.

Lud-in-the-Mist by Hope Mirrlees - Goodreads

It gives us the sleepy town of Lud-in-the-Mist which exists in a fictional land but seems to evoke the villages of 19th century England except it exists next to the land of Faerie, which seems to be just over the hills and across a border that everyone knows but refuses to acknowledge.

Lud-in-the-Mist (1926) is the third and final novel by British writer Hope Mirrlees. It continues the author's exploration of the themes of Life and Art, by a method already described in the preface of her first novel, Madeleine: One of Love's Jansenists (1919): "to turn from time to time upon the action the fantastic limelight of eternity, with a sudden effect of unreality and the hint of a world within a world".

Lud-in-the-Mist - Wikipedia

Lud-in-the-Mist – a prosperous country town situated where two rivers meet: the Dawl and the Dapple. The latter, which has its source in the land of Faerie, is a great trial to Lud, which had long rejected anything ‘other’, preferring to believe only in what is known, what is solid.
